

Santiago Correal

I write the angles, hooks and scripts behind Meta ads that sell.

Direct-response performance creative for DTC supplement, health and wellness brands. I map awareness and sophistication stages, write the hooks before anything gets designed, and brief the editors so they can execute without a back-and-forth. I do not edit video and I do not buy media.

Native English and Spanish, fluent Italian · Top Rated on Upwork, 100% Job Success · Meta Blueprint certified

EUR 2.2M	1.9x	$1.2M	2.1x
Net sales, women's supplement brand (DE)	Blended ROAS across 53 campaigns	Net sales, men's sexual-health brand	Blended ROAS across 11 campaigns

Both figures are blended across every campaign run for that brand, not a best-campaign number.

Where the compliance work and the strongest numbers are

Blended ROAS across every campaign run

Documented net sales

Women's Supplement Brand — Germany

FLAGSHIP

DTC creative strategy for a women's supplement brand selling into the German market. This is the largest engagement in the portfolio and the one that best describes how I work, because the category made the constraint impossible to ignore: the ad account was suspended repeatedly over the life of the work, so every angle had to be written to survive review as well as convert.

Fifty-three campaigns were run. The creative pipeline ran statics and UGC video in parallel against the same angle set, which meant a winning message could be identified separately from the format carrying it. Angles were mapped against awareness and sophistication stage before anything was designed, so each test round answered a question rather than just producing assets.

EUR 2.2M

Net sales

1.9x

Blended ROAS

53

Campaigns

DE

Market

Why it worked: writing inside structure-and-function claim language from the first draft, rather than trying to soften a non-compliant hook afterwards. Compliant angles ship, stay live, and accumulate learning. Aggressive ones get pulled, and every pull resets the account's standing with review.

Functional Mushroom Supplement

Advertorial creative for a category where nearly every competitor advertises the same ingredient list. The differentiator chosen was extraction quality — a specification most brands bury in the FAQ — and the mechanism of the product became the story.

Advertorial was the right format because the argument needs room. A 15-second video cannot explain why extraction ratio changes what the customer actually absorbs; a long-form editorial can, and it gives the ad something to say that a competitor cannot copy inside a week.

Why it worked: in a commoditised category, the specification is the angle. Whoever explains the mechanism first owns it.

Nootropic Focus Drink

DTC performance creative for Meta. Statics and UGC video developed in parallel against a shared angle set, so format and message could be evaluated independently rather than confounded in a single test.

Men's Sexual-Health Supplement

COMPLIANCE

Compliant direct-response creative for a category most strategists will not take on, because the failure mode is not a bad CPA. It is a dead ad account, and with it every audience signal and learning the account had accumulated.

Every hook was written to clear review on the first pass. That constraint shapes the copy: you cannot promise an outcome, so you sell the situation and the identity around it instead. Eleven campaigns were run to $1.2M in net sales at 2.1x blended.

$1.2M

Net sales

2.1x

Blended ROAS

11

Campaigns

Why it worked: the constraint became the creative brief. Working inside FTC and FDA claim rules forces you to sell through situation and identity rather than a promise, which is more durable copy in any category.

If your product touches health claims, minors, detox, or anything Meta treats as sensitive, this is the work that matters more than the ROAS number above it. Ask me about it directly.

WOMEN'S HEALTH

Drug-Free Period Pain Device

UGC and comparison creative for a wearable device treating period pain without medication. The creative was built on comparison framing against the painkiller the customer already reaches for.

The angle: the competitor is not another device, it is ibuprofen. The ad has to beat the habit, not the category.

First-Period Care Brand

Emotional direct-response creative for a first-period care brand. The structural problem here is that the buyer is a parent and the user is a child, and the two need different promises inside a single ad.

The angle: written to the parent's fear of getting it wrong, not to the product's feature list.

HABIT CHANGE

Quit-Nicotine Brand

UGC and social-proof creative. Testimonial-led throughout, because in habit change the only voice a sceptical buyer finds credible is somebody who has already done the thing.

The angle: social proof does the persuading and the brand stays out of the way. Scepticism-then-conversion is the arc that performs.

FITNESS & ACCESSORIES

All-Steel Shaker Bottle

DTC product creative for Meta. A considered-purchase object in a category dominated by cheap plastic, so the creative had to justify a price gap rather than describe a feature.

APPAREL, FOOTWEAR & WATCHES

Vegan Sneaker Brand — Germany

Benefits-led creative for the German market, translating a materials story (cactus leather, organic cotton) into a reason to buy rather than a sustainability claim. Sustainability is a tiebreaker, not a purchase driver, so the copy led with what the buyer gets.

Automatic Watch Brand

Product-hero and Black Friday creative. Discount-led promotional work where the offer carries the ad and the product photography has to make the original price look real.

WHAT THE PORTFOLIO IS WEIGHTED TOWARD

Portfolio by vertical

Ten documented brands. Seven sit in health, supplements or wellness, which is where the compliance work and the strongest attributed numbers are.

HOW I WORK

- 1 Map awareness and sophistication. Where the market already sits decides whether the ad opens with a problem, a mechanism, or a claim. Skipping this step is the single most common reason a creative test produces unreadable results.
- 2 Write hooks per angle before anything is designed. The angle is the unit of testing, not the asset. Design follows the message, never the reverse.
- 3 Run statics and UGC video in parallel. Same angles, two formats. This separates the winning message from the winning format, which a single-format test cannot do.
- 4 Brief editors and creators so they execute once. A brief that needs three rounds of clarification was not finished when it was sent. Briefs go out with the hook, the beat structure, the references and the reason.
- 5 Iterate on hook rate, hold rate, CTR and CPC. Using a 3:2:2 structure, and killing on evidence rather than on taste.

3:2:2 creative testing structure

Kill on hook rate, hold rate, CTR and CPC. Not on taste.

What I don't do: I don't edit video and I don't buy media. I hand finished briefs, hooks and scripts to your editors, and the numbers back to whoever runs the account. If you need one person to do all three, I'm the wrong hire and I'd rather say so now.

BACKGROUND

Scaled SteadyEcom to $2M a year — owning creative strategy alongside the funnel, the automations and the ads attribution, so I read the numbers that say which creative is actually working rather than only what Ads Manager reports.

Built and sold an AI marketing agency — Avalanche AI, with clients including Wholesome Good.

Led a team of 70 at NexxAI — across marketing, creative strategy and AI.

Past 5M views on short-form and UGC — for a supplement brand, converted to sales rather than left as reach.

Grew a wellness brand from 800 to 13K followers in six months — fully organic.

Compliance — I write inside structure-and-function claims plus FTC and FDA rules. In health and wellness this is usually the difference between a campaign that compounds and an account that gets restricted.

Certifications Meta Blueprint · TikTok Academy Creative · HubSpot Content Marketing · Google Digital Marketing
Education ESADE, MSc Innovation & Entrepreneurship

Want to see whether the angles hold up on your product?

Send me your product page and your current best-performing ad. I'll come back with three angles I'd test against it and the reasoning behind each, written out. No call required. If it's useful we can talk. If it isn't, you've lost nothing.

santiago@avalanche-ai.com · Barcelona (CET) · replies within 0-4 hours

Revenue and ROAS figures are blended across all campaigns run for that brand. Brand names are withheld where the engagement was under NDA and can be confirmed on a call.